Master of Law (MLaw) in judicial careers

GENERAL OUTLINE

Objectives

The Master of Law (MLaw) in Judicial Careers offers students who are interested in becoming a judge the opportunity to increase their chances of doing so, and also enables future lawyers to acquire the basics they need for judicial practice.

The aim of the course is to deepen and strengthen the legal knowledge acquired during a university degree, with an emphasis on understanding the whole of the judicial and procedural institution in the criminal, civil and administrative areas, and the process of reaching a judgment handed down by a court or other authority.

Skills development

The aims of the Master of Law in Judicial Careers course are:

- the acquisition of cross-cutting, interdisciplinary skills specific to the Faculty's three Schools (the School of Law, the School of Criminal Justice and the Graduate Institute of Public Administration) linked to judicial practice, managing a court, communication, interpreting evidence and the rights of victims and injured parties;
- the development of legal practice through workshops led by judges and teachers relating to family law, personal law, divorce, the work of Justices of the Peace, administrative practice and criminal practice.

Career prospects

University studies develop a great many transverse skills such as: communication, critical, analytical and summarising faculties, abilities in research, and so on. This panoply of skills, combined with specialist knowledge acquired in the course of studies, is excellent preparation for a wide range of employment opportunities such as:

- Private sector: independent barrister, in-house lawyer with a bank, insurance company, sporting federation, corporate legal department, legal protection services, etc.
- Public sector: judge, prosecutor, registrar, independent barrister/in-house lawyer with a federal, cantonal or municipal administrative authority (for example, in the areas of justice, police, finance, territorial development, welfare insurance, etc.)
- International organisations/NGOs: lawyer, for example in the fields of humanitarian law, human rights, intellectual property law, telecommunications law, etc.
- Other: politics, teaching, journalism, etc.
